

CHANGES IN PREPARATION FOR LONG-TERM ECONOMICALLY ACTIVE LIFE

Jiří Beck, Karel Hlavatý

Abstract: Article defines the issue of extending the economically active life as an important precondition for a meaningful extension of the life of people and as a new concept for solution current problems of social security of citizens in old age. The economically active life is defined as a part of the life of man, in which increases (or at least economically holds) their property. Article stresses the vital importance of the preparatory phase (10 to 30 years) for the entire economically active life. Its important part is education to social responsibility for own his life. The basic innovation, which leads to improvement of the preparatory phase, is a fundamental change in approach to a career human life in the present and in the near future. Promoter of this innovation can only be the State education system, in particular in its lowest levels. Given the themes of innovation, which improve the current preparatory phase of the economically active life. Currently for a resolution of practical problems of the economy is main obstacle the economic ignorance of the specific results related fields, some of which are listed in the article.

Keywords: economically active life, innovation, social responsibility

JEL classification: B41, D10, J17, J24