

On the government bill of cybernetic security act

Jiří Fuchs

Abstract: This article reflects upon the Government Bill of Cybernetic Security Act debated upon by the Parliament. It starts with pointing out to the necessity of ensuring cybernetic security and to the European and historical aspects of the Bill. Subsequently, it describes principles, on which the Bill is based, and key institutes, which the Bill is to introduce. Finally, it pays attention to certain problems, which may be identified in the Bill.

Keywords: Cybernetic security, cyberspace, National Security Bureau, critical information infrastructure, state of cybernetic danger

JEL Classification: K10, K23, K32